Abstract:

Mughal art and architecture, is a characteristic Indo-Islamic-Persian style that flourished on the Indian subcontinent during the Mughal empire (1526–1857). This new style combined elements of Islamic art and architecture, which had been introduced to India during the Delhi Sultanate and had produced great monuments. Mughal monuments are found chiefly in India, but there are also many remains in Pakistan. This article discusses these distinctive forms of art and architecture as they developed under a succession of Mughal emperors. With this article we know about that the Mughals are very skilled in this field. They had their own traditional idea of work but they blend it with Persian and Indian architecture. They used Indian patterns in buildings. At the end of this result we had great monuments in all over the India.

The Mughal Empire is also known as Mogul or Mongol Empire. The Mughal Empire founded by Babur who is the first Mughal emperor. Mughal Empire was a branch of the Timurid dynasty. Mughal Empire extended over large part of
